Four Organisations of India’s Freedom Struggle

Anushilan Samiti · Servants of India Society · Swaraj Party · Home Rule Leagues

Research dossier | 23 October 2026 | For factual stories aimed at readers around age 10 | No finished stories

Evidence rule: every factual entry below has a short, directly quoted source passage and a clickable link. No quote or link means no claim. Sources may describe the same event differently; these are marked UNSURE in section 4. “Home Rule League” refers to two separate organisations in 1916.

19. The Letter from City Road

What was in a 1917 letter asking branches to send their membership numbers?

> Exact quote: “The Secretaries, Home Rule League, 3, City Road, Allahabad”

Source: H2 · The Nehru Archive / Selected Works of Jawaharlal Nehru

20. The Boys Waiting at a Railway Station

Why were scouts waiting for Tilak in Madras in 1917?

> Exact quote: “Indian boy scouts wait for Bal Gangadhar Tilak at Central Station in Madras, 1917.”

Source: F8 · Wikimedia Commons / Imperial War Museums

Flagship angle (editorial planning only)

Angle 16, “Two Leagues, Not One,” is the strongest single entry point for a comparison story: one verified date for Tilak (23 April 1916), a separate date for Besant (September 1916), differing territories and named organisers are all present in an academic account. This is a research suitability judgement, not a judgement about the political organisations.

> Exact quote: “Tilak’s League was to work in Maharashtra, Karnataka, the Central Provinces and Berar.”

4. Disputes, legends and doubts

D1. Who founded Anushilan Samiti? — different emphasis

UNSURE whether a single person can be named its sole founder. One newspaper credits Mitra; the archival portrait record credits Basu. The records can describe different founding roles, but they do not establish a complete division of responsibility.

Exact quote: "The Anushilan Samiti was formed in 1902 by Pramathanath Mitra"

Source: A1 · The Indian Express

Exact quote: "Satish Chandra Basu, the founder of Anushilan Samiti."

Source: F3 · Wikimedia Commons

D2. When precisely did the Dhaka branch begin?

UNSURE: the Indian Express link says only that the branch opened later; that page does not give a year. Other sources disagree on the month of 1906, so no exact founding day is given here.

Exact quote: "The Samiti later opened a branch in Dhaka led by Pulin Behari Das"

Source: A1 · The Indian Express

D3. The Alipore case has different boundaries in later summaries

UNSURE which endpoint should be used for the case without checking original case papers. One historical overview labels it 1908–1910. This should not be silently changed to another date range.

Exact quote: "the Alipore bomb case (1908-1910)"

Source: A2 · The Wire / Shukla Sanyal

D4. Founding of Swaraj Party: 1922 versus 1923

The date disagreement is partly one of stages: an agreement to form a party took place at the end of 1922, while the later name and constitution were approved in February 1923; a Congress biography calls January 1923 the founding date.

Exact quote: "On 31 December 1922, at a meeting held at the Gaya residence"

Source: P1 · Indian National Congress

Exact quote: “on 20 February 1923, a general meeting of the Party was held at Allahabad”

Source: P1 · Indian National Congress

Exact quote: “founded the Swarajya Party in January 1923”

Source: P2 · Indian National Congress

D5. Home Rule was not always a demand for full independence

A contemporary court judgment explicitly describes Besant’s campaign as self-government inside the empire. Do not replace that documented aim with a later idea of complete independence.

Exact quote: “Self-Government within and as a part of the British Empire”

Source: H3 · Madras High Court judgment via Indian Kanoon

D6. A society “religious in spirit” was not a religious denomination

The Servants of India Society expressed service in religious language, but an academic text specifies that it was not a religious unit. Keep both meanings separate.

Exact quote: “in a religious spirit”

Source: S1 · Servants of India Society

Exact quote: “the Society was not a religious unit, neither it preached or patronised any religious belief”

Source: S3 · INFLIBNET / university e-text

D7. A university digital entry has a conflicting foundation year

UNSURE as to the origin of the date in its description: the same Jane Addams Digital Edition record labels the founding date 1905-06-12 but its prose says 1915. The Society’s own record supports 1905; the inconsistency is visible and flagged, not concealed.

Exact quote: “1905-06-12”

Source: S6 · Jane Addams Digital Edition / Ramapo College

Exact quote: “The Servants of India was created in 1915 by Gopal Krishna Gokhale”

Source: S6 · Jane Addams Digital Edition / Ramapo College

Exact quote: “on June 12, 1905”

Source: S1 · Servants of India Society

D8. Two Home Rule Leagues, rather than one merged organisation

Besant and Tilak ran distinct but cooperating leagues. The name in a source must be matched to the right league and its operating region.

Exact quote: “Besant’s League was given charge of the rest of India”

Source: H1 · INFLIBNET / university e-text

LEGEND / FAMILY MEMORY status

No independently attributed family story about these four organisations met the evidence rule for this dossier. None is included as fact. Later commemorative anecdotes without a source that identifies the teller are excluded.

5. Pictures

Only Commons pages opened and carrying a stated public-domain or Creative Commons licence are included. “Date” means original image/publication date when given; if only the date of digitisation is given, the original date remains UNSURE. These links lead to the full file record, not to thumbnails.

Media caution
